Designing for web Newstand ads, electronic billboards, business cards, and snapshots are among the images that appear on the web every day. Web designers help convert those images into web pages so that they look great on almost any browser window. Web designers deal with the following issues: *
**Resolution:** Images used for web pages must display at a resolution high enough to allow those images to be displayed on the wide range of monitor types in use. A 72-dpi (dots per inch) computer monitor should have no problem rendering an image at 300 DPI or higher, while a 72-dpi monitor often can't display an image at 200 DPI or less. * **Color** **:** If web images are displayed at 72-DPI resolution, they must also be displayed at a color depth (color resolution) appropriate for the monitor being used. For example, a web page with images designed for a default color depth of 32 bits per pixel should

Q: Knex strange behavior with promises with jade I have some issues with promises while using knex and jade. I have this function : function login (args){ return knex.select('users').from('users').where('UserName', args.UserName).where('password', args.password).first() .then(res => res.all()[0]) } I'm using it on my view like this - var Username = ${lookupUser(req, res, 'UserName')} When I go the browser directly to the path it works fine but when I go to the / path I get this error in the console : Cannot read property 'all' of undefined It seems that the function is not returning the knex.select... string I read some article about this and they told me to use res.json() instead of res.all(), but it doesn't work. Any help will be appreciated A: Thanks to @PawelKołaczkowski comment I figured out how to make it work. It's called knex.raw() So now the function is this function login (args){ return knex.raw('users').select('id,UserName').where('UserName', args.UserName).where('password', args.password).first().then(user => user.id).all() } and in the front-end part I call it like this var Username = ${lookupUser(req, res, 'UserName')} if(UserId!= '0' && Username!= '0'){ res.render('index', { UserId, Username

Q: How to keep debug on while launching the application I got a program where I am trying to keep the debug on whenever I launch the program. The reason I am doing this is a program which fetches the data over the internet. One issue I am facing is that it gets timed out after some time. eg. My program get timed out after 2000 sec of being active. My program is a web api which is accessible through a browser. I am guessing that the program is getting timed out because of a slow internet connection. So I am trying to keep the debug on to see if this is the reason. I am running this in VS2015 as debug build which is in the x86. A: If you need to debug something over the internet, it's not possible. What you need to do is add some timeout to your connection and when that timeout is reached, stop the program, add some variables and start the program again. I suggest doing this in a 3rd program, that will be the "client". That's the program that will fetch the data over the internet. The "debugger" will call the "client" program and after some timeout, send it a command that will start the program.
